IF NOTHING ELSE,

AT LEAST I HAVE MY THINGS.

IF NOTHING ELSE,

AT LEAST I HAVE MY THINGS.

SCARLETT BUSHELL

COLLECTION 2023/2024

LOOK-BOOK

LOOK 1

Layla wears Look 1, which features a hand-covered bra made from my dad's old shirts, integrated into a roll-neck draped top. The top is crafted from over-dyed striped knitted fabric found under the tables in the university studio and includes a section of green sequins sourced from the studio where I interned, rescuing it from landfill. The shorts in Look 1 are made from six re-purposed men's cotton shirts, all dyed to achieve a uniform grey tone. These shorts retain design elements from the men's shirts, such as a curved hem and original button stands used as closures. They can be styled in various ways using the different layers and tie details to create different shapes.

LOOK 2

Isa wears look two, a dress made using the donated striped knit that has been hand dyed and also screen printed with a bottle cap design. Integrated within, is a bra that's been covered using rescued green sequin and deep pink scrap velvet from my own fabric collection. This look also features a skinny scarf made to be styled and combined with the dress in various ways.

LOOK 3

Layla wears Look 3, which features a base layer romper made with a patchwork design. This romper combines dyed dead stock shirting and scrap velvet from my fabric collection, along with a stretch grey fabric sourced from the studio where I interned. The cardigan, made from 100% silk from my collection, can be styled in various ways to achieve multiple looks. The jacket is crafted from a vintage, damaged rug I picked up a while ago, giving it a new lease of life while preserving its original qualities. It is half-lined with green satin, found under the tables in the studio, to highlight the rug's underside and its original binding I used to finish the garment.

LOOK 4

The draped top is made from grey stretch fabric found under the tables in the studio. It features an old bra closure in the back. The large pleated skirt is constructed from over-dyed cotton shirting from my own stash of materials. A panel of beige velvet, also found in the studio, has been screen-printed and incorporated into the skirt. To add a colourful break within the large pleats, small panels of pink silk and green sequins are included. The pink silk was sourced from my house mate's great auntie, who mailed her some old fabrics, while the green sequins were rescued from being discarded by a small studio where I interned. The skirt also features ties made from scraps of my dad's old shirts, allowing it to be styled in multiple ways, creating more than one look from a single piece.

LOOK 5

Maggie wears Look 5, featuring a large draped top made from a thick sweater fabric I've kept for years. The top includes a re-purposed bra closure in the back. The long draped skirt is composed of three different fabrics arranged into four rectangular shapes, forming a larger rectangle to minimize fabric waste. It includes over-dyed striped knitted fabric sourced from my university, a deep pink velvet panel from my personal fabric collection, and a piece of 100% silk. The skirt is versatile, with no designated front or back, allowing it to be worn in various ways.

LOOK 6

Look 6, worn by Maggie. The top layer of this dress is re-purposed from my mum's old dress, which she gave me. After wearing it to a club, it ripped due to the delicate 100% silk fabric, which continued to tear over time. I aimed to highlight these imperfections while transforming the piece completely. The underlying dress provides support and features a patchwork design made from various fabrics. Panels of orange silk and green sequin, which I saved from being discarded during my internship, are included. Additionally, there are panels of pink silk from my house mate's great auntie's fabric collection. The skirt incorporates tulle from my personal stash, sections of the original dress, an old tutu, and another silk dress, all stitched together with care.

